

Dwarf Stein came home and saw that someone had drunk all of his mead.

The house was closed, and so Stein decided that one of his golems did it.

Stein went into the workshop (on the floor there are crumbs of stone, axes of different sizes on the wall).

At that time there were only three golems. Stein asked the same question to each of them: "Have you left the workshop today?"

(Stein walks up to the first of them, Hurg. He is lifting the barbell).

- I train all day! - answered Hurg. - I have no time to mess around.

Be-Be, the second golem, is reading the newspaper (Daily Dwarf News).

- Why go out? - he answered. - I feel comfortable and good here.

The third Golem, Stonp, is polishing his stones, standing in front of a mirror.

- Today I have not gone out yet. By the way, do you have a gel for dry surfaces?

Question: Which of them lied?

Answer: Be-Be lied. He would have to leave the workshop to get a daily newspaper.
