

Why should everyone start learning English?

Literally, just a couple of centuries ago, French was considered as an international language. But, after a short period of time, people began to use it less and less. In the 20th century, the French language lost its international status and its value dropped to a minimum. As you can probably guess, French was replaced by English, which has an international status even now.

This is due to a big amount of reasons: electronic devices, historical and geographical reasons, economic and political reasons, cultural and social causes, etc.

Modern realities are such that to communicate with a person from another country you need to use at least a simple dictionary, but this, as practice shows, is not enough for comfortable communication. So, learning English gives you an opportunity to make contact with people from another countries without problems.