For many years, people have been trying to find out the most reliable schemes for playing the lottery. And it sometimes works out. For example, Stefan Mandel won the jackpot 14 times. Of course, there is no exact way to win the main prize, but there are some tips.

For example, experienced players are advised to choose “unpopular” numbers. The main requirement of this approach is that you should simply forget about the numbers familiar to all people (for example, the date of some public holiday that will be on the eve of the draw). At the same time, in order to opt for the least demanded combinations, it is necessary to disassemble all the sequences in the head into several components with a kind of effort.

Most often, happy digital sets, which people mentally attribute to the first group, turn out to be the most frequent among players. It turns out that the most popular is from 60 to 75% of the available combinations (the simplest or the most associative).

The reason is that any number up to 31 is considered more popular than any other, and this may be due to the familiar numbers around us. In this case, it is assumed that in a similar way, associations with the duration of months arise in the human head.

In fact, all people in those situations when they need to come up with some kind of numerical sequence immediately provoke memories of memorable dates in their heads, and the number of days simply cannot exceed 31. That is why the combination should be chosen using larger numbers because they will definitely be less frequent.

This approach will not be able to bring the win closer, but it will make it more serious if something happens, because combinations of this kind are simply very unpopular, which means you won't have to share money or prizes with competitors.
